How to use this document

Read this first

This is the full set of words for the rebuilt ABWA World website: every page, every section, the form messages, the legal pages, an FAQ and three complete launch articles. It follows the page-by-page plan in the Technical Design Document (TDD v1.0, 21 October 2026), so each block of copy has a home in the build. It is written in a warm, honest, human voice, in British English.

What is in each block

- Labelled fields (HERO H1, SUBTITLE, BODY, CTA and so on) show where each piece of text sits on the page. Copy the text beside the label into the content files.
- CTA lines give the button label and its destination route. Labels and destinations must match exactly, as the TDD requires.
- Image brief lines say what kind of real photograph suits a section. They are not captions; write alt text and captions once the actual photo is chosen.
- Shaded notes are for you and ABWA, not for the website. They never get published.

Status tags

Tag	Meaning	What to do
READY	Based on facts that the TDD marks as confirmed, or on plain description that makes no factual claim.	Publish after the normal editorial review.
VERIFY	Drawn from ABWA's information sheets, the draft constitution or the old website. It may be right, but ABWA has not yet approved it.	Ask ABWA to confirm or correct before publishing.
HOLD	Depends on something that does not exist yet (verified figures, approved quotes, a payment method). Draft wording is given for when it does.	Leave off the live site until ABWA supplies what is needed.

The ground rules this copy follows

The TDD is firm that the site must not publish anything it cannot back up. So this copy deliberately:

- uses only the confirmed facts: founded in 2015, Nairobi, Kenya, and the phone number +254 720 021 001 (the P.O. Box 1204-00515 Buruburu is optional and only if ABWA agrees to publish it);
- says "aims to" and "plans to" for objectives, and uses the past tense for outcomes only where there is evidence (there is none supplied yet);
- has no invented statistics, testimonials, partner names, leadership names, dates, fees or registration numbers;
- describes the work camps as information sheets and plans, never as open bookings, because their current status is not confirmed;
- treats the supplied constitution as a proposed draft, not an approved document.

Start here: the ten decisions that unlock the most copy. The full list sits at the end of the document (Open Questions for ABWA). If you only have time for a few, these matter most: (1) are the work camps open and which programmes are active; (2) the official email address; (3) the founding year wording (the old site says 2014, the TDD confirms 2015); (4) the tagline; (5) registration and governance details; (6) how donations are received; (7) whether the P.O. Box is public; (8) social account links; (9) photo and story consent; (10) who reviews the three launch articles.

Voice and tone guide

Applies to every page

ABWA's old website spoke in big promises (“thousands of lives are impacted”). The new one should sound like a thoughtful person from ABWA talking to a visitor across a table: friendly, direct and honest about what is known and what is not.

Four voice principles

Principle	What it sounds like	What it avoids
Warm	“We'd love to hear from you.” Short sentences. “We” and “you”.	Corporate distance, “beneficiaries”, “stakeholders”.
Transparent	“We don't have a figure we can stand behind yet, so we won't print one.”	Round numbers, vague “thousands”, promises of results.
Human and dignified	People are neighbours, groups and partners with their own plans and skills.	Pity, “the needy”, “saving” or “rescuing” people, “slum” as a label.
Plain	International English that a first-time visitor in any country understands.	Jargon, acronyms without explanation, long abstract nouns.

Words we use and words we avoid

Instead of	Say	Why
slum	informal settlement, or simply the place name (Mathare)	Respectful, and the place name is more specific.
beneficiaries, the needy, vulnerable people	community members, women's group members, young people, families	People are participants, not recipients.
save, rescue, uplift, transform lives (as a promise)	work alongside, support, learn with, build skills	Avoids a saviour tone and unprovable claims.
thousands of lives impacted	(leave out unless a verified figure exists)	TDD rule: every number needs a source and a date.
registered NGO	(leave out until ABWA supplies proof)	TDD rule: no legal-status claim without evidence.
Programs	Programmes	British spelling throughout, used consistently.
voluntourism, “change a life in two weeks”	volunteering, shared work, cultural exchange	Sets honest expectations of what a short stay can do.

The tagline

ABWA's information sheets are headed “Transforming Lives Through Action”, while the old homepage used “Limits are only in the IMAGINATION” and “Transforming Lives, Everyday!”. This deck uses Transforming Lives Through Action as the working tagline, in the footer, About page and metadata. VERIFY The TDD lists the tagline for client approval. It is a hopeful phrase, so we pair it with honest language about how change actually happens.

2. Introduction

EYEBROW	Who we are
H2	Meet Action for Better World Association
BODY	Action for Better World Association, or ABWA, is a community organisation based in Nairobi, Kenya. Since 2015 we have worked with women's groups, young people, children and volunteers from Kenya and around the world on projects that build skills, grow food, nurture creativity and care for the environment. Our purpose is to promote sustainable community development: improving people's social, economic and environmental wellbeing, and helping growth include everyone. VERIFY Wording is drawn from the draft constitution. We work with community groups because they know their own priorities best. Volunteers and supporters bring hands, ideas and resources to walk alongside them.
CTA	Read Our Story > /about

3. Programmes overview

EYEBROW	What we do
H2	Our programmes
INTRO	Our work grows out of conversations with the communities we partner with. These are the main areas we focus on.
CARD 1	Youth Empowerment and Skills Art, music, learning support and community action with young people in Mathare, Nairobi. CTA: Explore youth empowerment > /programs/youth-empowerment
CARD 2	Women's Empowerment and Sustainable Agriculture Practical farming knowledge and shared learning with a women's group in Kangundo, Machakos County. CTA: Explore women's agriculture > /programs/womens-empowerment-sustainable-agriculture
CARD 3	Umisiiyu Women Group Vegetable farming and kitchen gardens with a women's group in Kibwezi, Makueni County. CTA: Explore the Umisiiyu project > /programs/umisiiyu-women-group
CARD 4	Environmental Conservation Tree planting, waste management and creative recycling, led together with local groups. CTA: Explore environmental action > /programs/environmental-conservation
CTA	View all programmes > /programs (section CTA)

VERIFY Show only programmes ABWA confirms. The TDD asks for four to six cards based on verified programme areas. Cards for past work should be labelled as past work, and the older items (feeding, computer training, home lighting, baseball) are held back until their status is confirmed.

4. Featured programme

EYEBROW	Featured programme
H2	Growing food, skills and confidence together
BODY	In Kangundo, in Machakos County, women's group members and volunteers share what they know about growing vegetables: which crops suit the local climate, how to prepare the soil, how to use local water well, and how to manage pests with care for the wider environment. Alongside the farming, our plans include conversations about leadership, financial decision-making and having a say in your own life. Farming days are also days of cooking, storytelling and cultural exchange.

WHAT HAPPENS	• Choosing crops that suit the place • Preparing land and soil • Using water wisely • Caring for crops and managing pests • Talking about leadership and money decisions • Sharing food, stories and traditions
STATUS LINE	Dates and availability for volunteering differ by project. Ask us what is possible right now. VERIFY
CTA	Explore the programme > /programs/womens-empowerment-sustainable-agriculture (primary)
CTA	Ask about volunteering > /volunteer (secondary)

5. Our approach

EYEBROW	How we work
H2	Built with communities, not for them
INTRO	These are the ideas that guide how we plan and carry out our projects.
CARD 1	Community first We start by listening. Projects are shaped with the groups we partner with, because they know their own priorities best.
CARD 2	Practical skills From soil preparation to painting, music to teaching, we focus on skills people can use in everyday life.
CARD 3	Care for the environment Tree planting, waste reduction and sustainable farming sit alongside everything else we do.
CARD 4	Respect and partnership Volunteers and partners are welcome as guests and collaborators. We ask everyone to arrive curious and respectful, and to learn as much as they give.

VERIFY These principles are proposed from ABWA's own documents. Approve them before they are presented as formal values.

6. Impact and evidence

EYEBROW	Our impact
H2	What our work looks like on the ground
BODY	We would rather show you real activity than quote big numbers. Our projects focus on art and music with young people, tree planting and waste reduction, vegetable farming with women's groups, and learning support in schools. We're gathering and checking the figures and stories behind our work, so that anything we publish here is accurate and agreed with the people involved. Until then, we'll show you what we do rather than overstate what we've achieved.

CTA	See how we think about impact > /impact

HOLD No counters, totals or “people reached” figures. Add a metric only with a value, label, date, source and ABWA approval (TDD module 037).

7. Community voices (testimonials)

EYEBROW	Community voices
H2	In their own words
INTRO	Short reflections from people we work alongside, shared with their permission.

HOLD Do not publish until ABWA has at least one genuine, attributed quote with written permission. No demo quotes and no star ratings. If none exist at launch, leave this whole section out. The TDD allows an approved “Community voices” story format without quotation marks as an alternative.

When quotes exist, each needs: the speaker's approved name or label, role or community, the quote, and a record of approval. Suggested request to send people: “May we share your words on our website, with your name (or without it, if you prefer)? You can change your mind at any time.”

Overview: who we are

H2	Who we are
BODY	Action for Better World Association (ABWA) is a community organisation based in Nairobi, Kenya. We work with women, young people and children, and with volunteers who join us from Kenya and abroad, on projects that build skills, strengthen livelihoods and care for the environment. Our tagline is Transforming Lives Through Action. VERIFY It is a big promise, so we try to keep it honest. Change is slow, it belongs to the people living it, and our role is to walk alongside them with practical help, shared skills and patience.
AT A GLANCE	• Founded: 2015 • Based in: Nairobi, Kenya • We work with: women's groups, young people, children and volunteers • Our focus: skills, farming and livelihoods, creativity, learning and the environment

Our story

H2	Our story
BODY	ABWA was founded in 2015 in Nairobi. We began with a belief that is still at the heart of our work: that all it takes to change the world is a little support, and that support is strongest when neighbours, friends and volunteers from far away share it. Since then we have involved young people, women, children and international volunteers in community development projects, always with the same aim of making a difference through volunteering and shared effort.

VERIFY We have kept this short on purpose. The TDD says not to invent founders, founding incidents or milestones. The only facts available are the year and the sentence about "a little support" from the old Our Story page. The old site said "since 2014"; the TDD confirms 2015.

To make this page richer, ask ABWA for: who started the organisation and why; the first project and where; two or three real milestones with dates; and a photograph or two from the early years. Then add a short timeline of verified events only.

Purpose, vision and objectives

H2	What we aim to do
PURPOSE	ABWA aims to promote sustainable community development to improve people's quality of life and to foster inclusive growth by improving their social, economic and environmental wellbeing. VERIFY Adapted from the main object in the draft constitution; keep the official wording exact once approved.
VISION (PROPOSED)	A world where communities have the skills, opportunities and support to shape their own futures. VERIFY No vision statement was supplied. This is a suggestion for ABWA to accept, change or drop.
H3	Our objectives
OBJECTIVE 1	Economic opportunity We aim to support local entrepreneurship and small businesses, especially in rural areas and urban informal settlements, through training, market links and access to finance.
OBJECTIVE 2	Inclusion and equity We aim to run initiatives that empower people who are often left out, including people living with disability.
OBJECTIVE 3	Care for the environment We aim to promote sustainable practices and conservation with communities, including tree planting and waste management.
OBJECTIVE 4	Skills and mentoring We aim to offer training, mentoring and capacity-building so that community members can grow their skills.

VERIFY Objectives come from clause 5 of the supplied proposed constitution. Do not call it an approved constitution until ABWA confirms. Show "aims to" wording only.

Focus areas

H2	Where we focus
INTRO	A focus area is a long-term priority. A programme is a specific piece of work within it. Here is how they connect.
FOCUS 1	Youth empowerment and creativity Giving young people space to build skills, share their talents and take part in community life. Link: /programs/youth-empowerment

FOCUS 2	Women's livelihoods and sustainable agriculture Sharing practical farming knowledge and supporting women's decision-making and income. Link: /programs/womens-empowerment-sustainable-agriculture
FOCUS 3	Environmental care Planting trees, reducing waste and finding new uses for what would be thrown away. Link: /programs/environmental-conservation
FOCUS 4	Learning and skills Supporting teaching and training so that people can use new skills in everyday life. Link: /programs (point to a live page once education or computer-skills content is approved)

Every focus area must link to at least one live page. Drop any card that has no approved programme page yet.

How we work

H2	How we work
PRINCIPLE 1	We listen first. Projects are shaped with community groups, not handed to them.
PRINCIPLE 2	We work with local knowledge. Farmers, teachers, artists and mentors in the community lead. Volunteers support.
PRINCIPLE 3	We share skills that last. We focus on things people can keep using after a project day ends.
PRINCIPLE 4	We respect people's dignity. We ask permission before sharing anyone's story or photograph, and we take particular care with children.
PRINCIPLE 5	We say what we know and what we don't. If we cannot back up a claim with evidence, we leave it out.

Leadership, governance and accountability

H2	Accountability
BODY	We think organisations should be easy to hold to account. If you are a funder, partner, researcher or community member and would like to know more about how ABWA is run, please ask us and we will share what we can. We'll add our registration and governance details to this page as soon as they have been checked and approved.
CTA	Contact ABWA > /contact

Where we work

H2	Where we work
BODY	ABWA is based in Nairobi, Kenya. We work where we have built relationships with community groups, rather than claiming to be everywhere. Our project plans involve three places.
LOCATION 1	Mathare, Nairobi Work with a local youth group on art, music, learning support and environmental action.
LOCATION 2	Kangundo, Machakos County Work with a women's group on vegetable farming and shared learning.
LOCATION 3	Kibwezi, Makueni County Work with the Umisiiyu Women Group on vegetable farming and kitchen gardens.

VERIFY These locations come from the supplied information sheets. Confirm each one is current before presenting it as current work. Do not imply national or international field operations.

DESCRIPTION	Together with a local youth group, ABWA creates space for young people to build skills, share their talents and take part in the life of their community.
STATUS LINE	VERIFY [Active / Completed / Planned], as approved by ABWA.

Context

H2	About this programme
BODY	Mathare is one of the oldest and largest informal settlements in Nairobi. Like many neighbourhoods with limited infrastructure and few job opportunities, it is also full of talent, energy and ideas. Young people here are already making things, organising and learning from each other. This programme aims to back what they are already doing, with skills, mentoring and a wider circle of people to learn with.

What happens

H2	What happens on the programme
CREATIVE SKILLS	Art and music • Drawing and painting lessons for children and interested young people, led by art teachers with volunteers • Music production, where volunteers and local young people record and perform together
LEARNING AND MENTORING	Learning and mentoring • Mentors working with teenage girls on health education and on making informed choices about their lives • Volunteers supporting teachers in local primary and secondary schools • Conversations about leadership, money decisions and having a say in your own future

COMMUNITY AND ENVIRONMENT	Community and environment • Tree planting along the Mathare River and nearby • Waste management and recycling, including making useful products from waste plastic • Kitchen gardens: growing vegetables in plastic bottles and pipes in small urban spaces
CULTURAL EXCHANGE	Sharing and cultural exchange Sport, games, shared meals and outings that let young people and volunteers swap traditions and challenge stereotypes.

These are activities described in ABWA's project plans, not results. Use present tense for "what happens" only after ABWA confirms the programme is running.

Intended outcomes

H2	What we hope to achieve
BODY	This programme aims to help young people build creative and practical skills, make informed choices, take part in decisions that affect them, and look after their local environment. It does not promise jobs or particular results.

Safeguarding note

H2	Keeping young people safe
BODY	Young people's names, faces and stories are shared only with their consent and, for children, their parent or guardian's consent. We take care not to reveal personal histories or details that could put anyone at risk. VERIFY ABWA to confirm this reflects its practice.

Final call to action

Programme: Women's Empowerment and Sustainable Agriculture

Route: /programs/womens-empowerment-sustainable-agriculture

VERIFY Based on the Kangundo Women Group information sheet. Confirm: camp status, duration and volunteer conditions before any date or booking language appears. The 14-day structure is not shown as a current offer.

META TITLE	Women's Farming and Empowerment in Kangundo | ABWA World
META DESCRIPTION	A women's group in Kangundo, Machakos County shares sustainable vegetable-farming skills and leadership conversations with ABWA and volunteers.
H1	Women's Empowerment and Sustainable Agriculture
SUBTITLE	Farming skills, shared learning and stronger livelihoods with a women's group in Kangundo, Machakos County.
DESCRIPTION	Women and volunteers learn from each other about growing vegetables well, caring for the land, and making confident decisions about income and community life.
STATUS LINE	VERIFY [Active / Completed / Planned], as approved by ABWA.

Context

H2	About this programme
BODY	Farming is central to life in much of Kenya. Many smallholder farmers have limited access to modern tools and up-to-date information, which can mean uncertain harvests and unpredictable income. This programme works with a women's group in Kangundo. The group's knowledge of local soil, weather and crops is the starting point. Volunteers join in, share ideas and help with the work.

What happens

H2	What happens on the programme
VEGETABLE FARMING	Vegetable farming • Choosing vegetable varieties that suit the local climate • Preparing land and soil, including when to add manure or fertiliser • Managing pests and diseases with care for the wider environment • Watering, using local water sources well
WOMEN'S EMPOWERMENT	Women's empowerment conversations • Leadership and decision-making • Financial investment and income • Access to health services and information • Rights and protections, and the freedom to make your own choices

CULTURAL EXCHANGE	Cultural exchange Kamba traditions such as drumming, wood carving and beadwork, along with storytelling, games, hill walks and cooking together.
OPTIONAL	Optional excursions Some camps may include a visit to a historical or wildlife site after the work is done. VERIFY

Aims

H2	What we hope to achieve
BODY	We aim to support food security, better nutrition and improved incomes for farming households. We also aim to help farmers adapt to local climate conditions, reach market demand and manage pests in ways that protect the environment. These are aims, and we do not publish yield or income figures until we can verify them.

Final call to action

META TITLE	Umisiiyu Women Group, Kibwezi | ABWA World
META DESCRIPTION	ABWA works with the Umisiiyu Women Group in Kibwezi, Makueni County on vegetable farming and kitchen gardens for food and family income.
H1	Umisiiyu Women Group
SUBTITLE	Vegetable farming and kitchen gardens with a women's group in Kibwezi, Makueni County.
DESCRIPTION	A women's farming group with a long record of welcoming volunteers shares its knowledge of growing food in a dry climate.
STATUS LINE	VERIFY [Active / Completed / Planned], as approved by ABWA.

Context

H2	About the group
BODY	The Umisiiyu Women Group is based in Kibwezi, in Makueni County in eastern Kenya, and its members farm together. According to the group's own history, it began in 2015, after a long drought and the end of charcoal burning, which had been a main source of family income, left many households looking for new ways to earn. VERIFY ABWA's role is to support the group's farming and to welcome volunteers who want to learn from the women's experience.

What happens

H2	What happens on the programme
FARMING	Vegetable farming and kitchen gardens • Selecting vegetables that suit the local climate • Preparing land and timing manure and fertiliser • Managing pests and diseases together • Watering and using local water sources wisely
EMPOWERMENT	Women's empowerment conversations Leadership, financial decisions, access to health information and the freedom to make your own choices.
CULTURE	Cultural exchange Akamba crafts, drumming, storytelling, hill walks and shared cooking.

Aims

H2	What we hope to achieve
BODY	We aim to support food security, healthier family diets and better farm incomes, and to help the group make good use of local water. We do not claim particular results until they are verified.

Final call to action

H2	Curious about this project?

META DESCRIPTION	How ABWA works with local groups on tree planting, waste management and creative recycling in Nairobi and beyond.
H1	Environmental Conservation
SUBTITLE	Planting trees, reducing waste and giving everyday materials a second life.
DESCRIPTION	Looking after the environment is part of everything we do. Here is how we do it with local groups.
STATUS LINE	VERIFY [Active / Completed / Planned], as approved by ABWA.

Context

H2	About this work
BODY	Clean surroundings, shade, healthy soil and safe water matter to everyone, and they matter most in places with limited public services. Our environmental work is led together with local groups, so that it reflects what they want to see in their own neighbourhoods.

What happens

H2	What happens
TREES	Tree planting Planting trees together with local young people, including along the Mathare River and nearby areas.
WASTE	Waste management and recycling Helping communities reduce, sort and reuse waste, including making useful and beautiful products from waste plastic.
GROWING	Growing food sustainably Kitchen gardens in small urban spaces, and sustainable vegetable farming that uses local water sources carefully.

Aims

H2	What we hope to achieve
BODY	We aim to help communities care for their local environment, reduce waste, and see the link between healthy surroundings and healthy livelihoods.

Programme drafts on hold

Legacy items from the old website. Draft wording for use only after ABWA confirms status

HOLD The old website lists these items, but the TDD says an old-site mention is not proof they are active. Each needs confirmation of status, details and permissions before a page or card appears.

I have left out these old-site claims because nothing supports them: “over 430 children receive food”, “thousands of lives are impacted”, a population figure for Mathare, and claims that computer classes keep young people away from crime and drugs. If ABWA can evidence any of them, they can be added with a date and source.

Education and Child Wellbeing (/programs/education-child-wellbeing)

SUMMARY	Supporting children's learning and everyday wellbeing in partnership with local schools and community members.
BODY	Children learn and grow best when they are fed, supported and encouraged. ABWA has supported school and community activities in Nairobi, including a feeding programme at a local school. VERIFY Child protection comes first. We do not publish children's full names, personal stories, school timetables or identifying details, and we do not link donations to an individual child.
NEEDS APPROVAL	Is the feeding programme current? Which school may be named? Photo and guardian consent? Is there a safeguarding policy to mention?

Computer Skills and Digital Access (/programs/computer-skills)

SUMMARY	Introductory computer classes for young people who want to build digital skills.
BODY	ABWA has offered computer literacy classes to young people who were interested. The aim is to help participants build practical skills for work and small business. VERIFY We do not promise certificates, devices, internet access or job placement.
NEEDS APPROVAL	Active, past or planned? Curriculum level, participant group, location, dates. If past, present as an archived story.

Home Lighting Initiative (/programs/home-lighting)

SUMMARY	Working with a partner to bring solar-powered light to homes in remote areas.
BODY	Many remote households still lack reliable electricity. ABWA's home lighting work with a partner organisation aimed to help families light their homes for study and daily life. VERIFY We make no claims about electricity access or safety until the project's outputs are confirmed.
NEEDS APPROVAL	Partner name and permission to mention it (the old site names Energy Kit For All, EKFA), technology used, communities, timeframe, outputs.

Clappers Baseball Team (story, not a programme page)

SUMMARY	A youth baseball team that builds teamwork, discipline and confidence through regular training and coached games.
BODY	Clappers Baseball Team is a youth sports initiative linked with ABWA. Through consistent training and coached competition, young people develop baseball skills, fitness and teamwork. VERIFY
NEEDS APPROVAL	Team name, relationship to ABWA, status, permission for team marks and participant photos. Consider a short story format instead of a full programme page.

Social Inclusion and Livelihoods (keep in About unless a real programme exists)

SUMMARY	Helping people who are often left out, including people living with disability, to take part in economic and community life.
BODY	Inclusion is part of ABWA's stated purpose. If ABWA runs specific activities in this area, we'd describe them here, using respectful language that treats people as partners and not as passive recipients. VERIFY Currently this is an organisation-wide objective and not a standalone programme.
NEEDS APPROVAL	Any real activities, partners and participants. Do not create a thin page from constitution clauses alone.

Introduction

H2	Find your way in
BODY	Every kind of support matters, and not all of it is money. People get involved with ABWA by giving their time, sharing a skill, making an introduction, partnering through their organisation, or giving financially. A quick note on honesty: what is available changes from month to month, and we confirm every opportunity with you directly. Nothing on this page is a guarantee of a place or a date. We would rather talk to you first than promise something we cannot deliver.

Ways to take part

CARD 3	Support our work Find out how to give, and how we will tell you where your support goes. CTA: Support Our Work > /donate
CARD 4	Share our story Follow ABWA on social media and tell someone who might want to help. CTA: Follow ABWA > social links (only once approved)

VERIFY Show only the cards whose route is real. Add an in-kind support card only when ABWA confirms what it can accept. Never add false urgency such as "only 3 places left".

DESCRIPTION	We welcome local and international volunteers. Here is what to expect before you get in touch.

Honest expectations

H2	Before you enquire

Please read this first. Volunteering with ABWA depends on current projects and on what our community partners want. Sending an enquiry does not guarantee a place. Dates, costs, accommodation, meals, transport and insurance differ by project, and we confirm them in writing before you commit. Nothing on this website should be taken as a booking or a price.

Who can enquire

H2	Who can enquire
BODY	We welcome enquiries from local and international volunteers. You do not need special qualifications to ask. Curiosity, respect and a willingness to learn matter more than a CV. Skills that are often useful include teaching, art, music, farming and gardening, and environmental work. If you have another skill you would like to share, tell us.

VERIFY Add minimum age, language, health or document requirements only if ABWA confirms them. Do not ask for passport, ID or health details in the first enquiry.

What volunteering can look like

H2	What volunteering can look like

BODY	Our work-camp plans describe small groups spending around two weeks with a community project. Days are shaped by the host group: working on a farm or kitchen garden, helping with lessons, taking part in art or music, planting trees, and sharing meals, games and stories. Volunteers usually live simply, often with host families or in basic shared accommodation, and take part in everyday household tasks such as cooking together. Many volunteers say this is the part that teaches them most. VERIFY Replace “many volunteers say” only if ABWA can share real feedback. Otherwise delete the sentence.

Growing Resilient Communities Through Sustainable Agriculture in Kenya

Good farming is a conversation between people, soil, water and weather. Here is what that looks like in practice, and why it sits at the heart of our work with women's groups.

By the ABWA team | Agriculture | 4 min read

Ask a farmer what makes a good season and you will rarely get a single answer. Rain matters. So do seeds, soil, timing, pests, market prices and the hours a family has to spare.

For many households in Kenya, farming is not just an occupation. It is how the family eats, and often how school fees get paid. That is why we think about sustainable agriculture as a community topic, not only a technical one. When farming becomes more reliable and gentler on the land, whole households feel the difference.

Why food security starts at home

Food security means that a household can reliably get enough nutritious food. For smallholder farmers, who work small plots and often depend on rain, that can be fragile. A late rainy season, a pest outbreak or a fall in market prices can turn a good plan into a hard year.

Many smallholders also have limited access to up-to-date information and tools, which can mean lower yields and unpredictable income. Closing that gap rarely needs anything dramatic. It often begins with shared knowledge and a few well-chosen practices.

Five practical principles of sustainable farming

Sustainable farming is not one technique. It is a way of working that keeps the land, the water and the community healthy for the next season and the one after. These five ideas come up again and again.

1. Choose crops that suit the place. Varieties matched to your local climate and rainfall usually cope better than those that need ideal conditions. Growing several different vegetables instead of one also spreads the risk if one crop fails.

2. Look after the soil. Healthy soil holds water and feeds plants. Preparing the land well, adding manure or compost at the right time, covering the ground with mulch and rotating crops all help keep soil fertile without wearing it out.

3. Use water wisely. Where water is limited, every drop counts. Watering at cooler times of day, directing water to the roots, and making good use of nearby sources such as rivers or collected rainwater can stretch a supply further.

4. Manage pests with care. Integrated pest management starts with watching your crops closely and preventing problems early, for example through healthy soil and a variety of crops. Stronger controls come in only when they are needed, with attention to the wider environment. Using less, and using it carefully, protects people, pollinators and water.

5. Grow for the table and the market. A kitchen garden can bring fresh vegetables and better nutrition to a household every day. Any surplus can be sold, and learning what buyers want helps farmers decide what to plant.

What women's farming groups bring

In many communities, women play a central part in producing food and in feeding the household. When women farm in groups, they can share labour, seeds and know-how, and they can speak with a stronger voice about markets, money and land.

ABWA's work-camp plans with women's groups in Kangundo and Kibwezi centre on exactly this kind of shared learning. The themes include choosing vegetables that suit local conditions, preparing land, timing manure and fertiliser, managing pests and watering well. They sit alongside conversations about leadership, financial decisions and having a say in your own life.

These are our planned learning themes. We do not claim any particular yield or income result from them.

Adapting to changing seasons

In many places, seasons are becoming harder to predict. That makes flexibility more valuable: a mix of crops, soil that holds water, careful use of local water sources, and a habit of learning from neighbours who have tried something new. Farmers have always adapted. Sharing what works, and what does not, makes that adapting faster and less risky.

Small spaces, big potential

You don't need a large field to grow food. In dense urban neighbourhoods, families can grow leafy vegetables in recycled plastic bottles and pipes beside a doorway or against a wall, using organic methods. ABWA's plans for its youth programme in Mathare include teaching this kind of kitchen gardening, because even a small harvest can add variety and freshness to a household's meals.

Questions to ask before the next planting season

- What grew well last season, and why do I think that was?
- Which crops need less water, and could I grow more of them?
- When and how can I add compost or manure to my soil?
- How will I check my crops for pests, and what is the gentlest way to respond?
- Where will the harvest go: the family table, a neighbour, the market?

Honest limits

No technique works everywhere. Soil, rainfall, altitude and access to markets vary from one farm to the next, so advice always needs adapting to local conditions, and farmers' own experience should shape it.

This article is general information, not agronomic advice. We are a community organisation, not a team of agronomists. For advice about your own land, your county agricultural extension officer or a trusted local agricultural organisation is the best place to start.

Where to learn more

If you would like to know more about ABWA's work with women's farming groups, you can read about the programme or get in touch. If you are a farmer, agronomist or agricultural organisation who would like to share what you know, we would be glad to hear from you.

Youth Empowerment Through Creativity, Skills and Community Action

Young people are not waiting to be rescued. They are painting, recording, planting and organising. Here is how good programmes make room for that.

By the ABWA team | Youth | 5 min read

In neighbourhoods all over the world, Nairobi's included, you will find young people with ideas: musicians, painters, makers, organisers. What many of them lack is not talent but access. Access to tools, to teachers, to networks, and to a seat where decisions are made.

That gap is what good youth programmes try to close. Done well, they do not “fix” young people. They open doors, and then they step aside.

What empowerment actually means

The word gets used a lot, so it helps to be specific. Empowering young people means helping them gain access to resources, opportunities and decision-making, and the chance to take a full part in society. In practice, that touches four areas:

- Economic: understanding leadership, money and investment, and having a say over how money is used.
- Health: access to accurate health information and services.
- Rights: laws and institutions that protect people and guard against discrimination.
- Agency: the ability to make real choices about your own life.

Why creativity is a good starting point

Art and music are easy to join. You can begin with a pencil or a beat, in any language, at any level. They give young people a way to express themselves, to be seen, and to be proud of something they made. They also bring people together across age and background.

Creative work can be a gentle first step into other kinds of learning. A young person who comes along for a painting lesson might stay for a conversation, find a mentor, or start a plan.

Skills that travel

Creative skills sit comfortably alongside practical ones. Supporting teachers in school, growing vegetables in small urban spaces and turning waste into useful products are all skills that can be used at home, at school or in a small business.

No programme can promise jobs. What a good one can do is widen what a young person knows how to do, and who they know.

Community action: from the river to the classroom

Young people are often the first to notice what is wrong in their surroundings, and they can be the strongest force for improving it. Planting trees along a river, sorting and reusing waste, or helping a younger child with their reading are all ways to see your own effort change something you can point to.

That sense of ownership matters. When young people help lead a project, it tends to fit the neighbourhood better and to last longer.

Designing for safety and inclusion

Any work with young people needs strong safeguards. Good practice includes:

- Asking for consent before using a photo, name or story, and for a parent or guardian's consent when someone is under 18.
- Having trusted, trained mentors lead sensitive subjects such as health education, and keeping young people safe from unsupervised time with people they do not know.
- Welcoming girls and boys, and people with disabilities, and thinking about what might stop someone taking part: cost, distance, time or safety.
- Listening to young people about what they want, and changing the plan when they say something is not working.
- Protecting privacy by not sharing details that could put anyone at risk.

Why mentoring matters

Skills are only part of the picture. A trusted adult who listens, who knows the neighbourhood and who treats a young person as capable can make a lasting difference. That is why many good programmes put mentoring at the centre, with mentors who live in or know the community, and with volunteers working alongside them rather than in their place.

Mentoring is especially important for girls, who may face extra barriers to education, health information and a say in decisions. Programmes that offer girls a safe space, accurate information and the chance to make informed choices about their own lives can help them see more options ahead.

How to tell whether a youth programme is working

Counting how many young people turn up is a start, but it is not enough. Better questions include:

- Are young people still taking part after the first few weeks, and do they say it is worth their time?
- Do they have a real say in what the programme does next?
- Can they point to something new they can do, make or understand?
- Is the organisation honest about what has not worked?

We would rather admit what we cannot yet show than promise results we have not measured. That is why this website does not publish figures about our youth work until we can stand behind them.

Where volunteers fit

Volunteers can bring energy, a fresh perspective and specific skills such as teaching, art or music. The strongest youth work uses them as supporters of local leaders and mentors, not as replacements, and makes sure the learning goes both ways.

What ABWA's plans for Mathare include

ABWA's information sheets for a youth programme with a local group in Mathare, Nairobi, describe art lessons led by art teachers, music production, mentoring for teenage girls, support for teachers in local schools, tree planting along the Mathare River, recycling and waste management, and kitchen gardens. They also describe cultural exchange between young people and volunteers.

These are plans and descriptions of the work. We are updating this website to be clear about which parts are running now, and we will not present planned activities as achieved results.

How communities and partners can take part

If you belong to a community group, a school, a business or an organisation that would like to support young people's creativity and skills, a good first step is a conversation. Tell us what you can offer and what you hope to learn, and we will take it from there.

What Ethical Community Volunteering in Kenya Should Look Like

Good intentions are not enough. These are the questions worth asking before you volunteer, and what a good host organisation should be able to answer.

By the ABWA team | Volunteering | 4 min read

Volunteering abroad can be a generous, eye-opening experience for everyone involved. It can also go wrong: when volunteers arrive with their own idea of what a community needs, when children become photo opportunities, or when a short visit leaves a project with more work than it had before.

Whether you are thinking of volunteering with ABWA or with any other organisation in Kenya, here is what we think ethical volunteering should include.

1. Start with what the community wants

The best volunteering responds to priorities set by the community, not by the visitor. A good host organisation can tell you who asked for the project, who leads it and how decisions are made. Be cautious about any project where volunteers are the main decision-makers.

2. Prepare, and arrive with humility

Read about Kenya before you go, and about the particular place you will be staying. Learn a few words of Swahili or the local language. Expect to do things differently, and expect that local people may know better than you. Cultural humility means being willing to be corrected and treating the people you meet as experts in their own lives.

3. Offer useful skills, and be realistic

A fortnight will not transform a community, and a good project will not pretend it does. What a short stay can do is contribute to work that is already under way: extra hands on a farm, an assistant in a classroom, an art lesson, a shared planting day. Ask which skills are genuinely useful, and avoid taking on tasks that a local person could do and be paid to do.

4. Put safeguarding and consent first

Children are never an attraction. Ethical volunteering means:

- Child protection rules that are explained to you, and that you follow.
- No photos or videos of people, especially children, without clear permission.
- No time alone with children, and no giving money or gifts to individual children, which can cause harm and unfairness.
- Care on social media: nothing that identifies a child, a family or a home.

5. Think about what remains when you leave

Ask how the project will carry on after you have gone. Good projects build skills and relationships that last, and they do not depend on a constant stream of visitors to keep going.

6. Expect clear answers about money

Ask what any fee covers, what goes to the community or the host families, and where the rest goes. A good organisation will answer without defensiveness and will put costs in writing before you commit. The same goes for donations.

What a good day can look like

A good volunteer day is often unglamorous. You might spend a morning weeding beside a farmer, an afternoon helping with an art lesson, and an evening cooking and talking with your host family. You will probably be tired, make a few mistakes and learn a few words. You will not “fix” anything. But you can help, you can listen, and you can leave having built a respectful relationship that matters to both sides.

Red flags to watch for

None of these automatically means a project is bad, but each one is a reason to ask more questions.

- Promises of changing lives or solving a problem in a couple of weeks.
- Pressure to take photos with children, or to visit children's homes as an attraction.
- No clear answers about who runs the project, or where fees go.
- No child protection policy, or no checks on people who work with children.
- Work that replaces local workers, such as building that local builders could be paid to do.
- Vague or changing details about costs, accommodation and safety.

Eight questions to ask any organisation

- Who asked for this project, and who leads it?
- What will I actually do each day?
- Are my skills useful here, or would a local person do this better?
- What are your child protection and photography rules?
- What exactly do I pay for, and where does the money go?
- Who will look after me, and what happens if something goes wrong?
- How does the project continue after I leave?
- Can I speak to a past volunteer or a community member?

How ABWA approaches this

ABWA's information sheets for its work camps describe volunteers working alongside community groups, living simply with host families or in shared accommodation, cooking together and taking part in cultural exchange. They also set out ground rules for volunteers.

We are still updating this website, and we do not currently promise any particular programme, date, place or price here. If you send us an enquiry, we will tell you honestly what is available and confirm the details in writing before you commit to anything. And we would like you to hold us to the standards in this article.

After you return home

Ethical volunteering does not end at the airport. You can keep in touch with the people you met, share what you learned with care for their dignity and privacy, support the organisation in the ways it asks for, and encourage friends to ask the same questions you did.

Ready to ask?

If you would like to talk about volunteering with ABWA, you can send us a short enquiry. There is no pressure, and no obligation.

Questions and answers

Q	Who is ABWA?
A	Action for Better World Association (ABWA) is a community organisation based in Nairobi, Kenya, founded in 2015. We work with women, young people and children, and with volunteers, on projects around skills, farming, creativity and the environment.
Q	What does ABWA do?
A	We support community-led projects. Our work includes youth empowerment through art, music and learning support, sustainable vegetable farming and empowerment conversations with women's groups, and environmental action such as tree planting and waste reduction. Our programme pages explain each in more detail.
Q	Where do you work?
A	We're based in Nairobi. Our project plans involve Mathare in Nairobi, Kangundo in Machakos County and Kibwezi in Makueni County. We work where we have built relationships with community groups.
Q	Can I volunteer with ABWA?
A	Possibly. Opportunities depend on current projects and on what our community partners want. Send us an enquiry on the Volunteer page and we'll tell you honestly what is available. An enquiry doesn't guarantee a place.
Q	Are your work camps open for booking?
A	Not through this website. Our information sheets describe work camps of around two weeks, but dates and availability change and we don't take bookings online. Please contact us to ask what is possible right now.
Q	Do I need special skills to volunteer?
A	No special qualifications are needed to ask. Skills in teaching, art, music, farming and environmental work are often useful, but curiosity, respect and a willingness to learn matter most.

Q	How much does it cost to volunteer?
A	It depends on the project, and we don't publish prices on this website. We'll explain any costs in writing before you commit, including what they cover.
Q	How can I support ABWA financially?
A	We're setting up a secure way to give online. Until then, please contact us and we'll share ABWA's official giving details with you directly. Please only give using details confirmed by ABWA.
Q	How can my organisation partner with ABWA?
A	Use the Partner With Us page to start a conversation. We like to begin by understanding shared goals, and then talk about what a partnership could look like.
Q	How do you protect children and people's privacy?
A	We ask for consent before sharing anyone's photo, name or story, and for children we ask for a parent or guardian's consent. We don't share details that could put someone at risk. If you would like something removed, please contact us.
Q	What happens to the information I send you?
A	We use it only to reply to you. Our Privacy Policy explains what we collect, why, and what choices you have.
Q	How do I contact ABWA?
A	You can call +254 720 021 001 or use the form on our Contact page. We're based in Nairobi, Kenya.

Open questions for ABWA

What needs confirming before this copy can go live

These are the gaps and conflicts found while reading the TDD, the information sheets, the draft constitution and the old website. Each one blocks or shapes specific copy. Sending this list to ABWA as it stands should get you most of the answers in one go.

#	Question for ABWA	What I found	Affects
1	Which programmes are active, completed or planned?	Info sheets and old site list work but give no status. Old items (feeding, computer training, home lighting, baseball) are unverified.	Programmes, Home, About
2	Are the work camps open? What are the real dates, group size, duration and costs?	Info sheets say 14 days and 10 to 15 participants, and show accommodation prices, but they are not confirmed as current. The copy offers no booking.	Volunteer, FAQ, Programmes
3	What is the official founding year wording?	TDD confirms 2015. Old Our Story page says “since 2014”.	Home, About, FAQ
4	What is the official tagline?	Info sheets: “Transforming Lives Through Action”. Old site: “Limits are only in the IMAGINATION” and “Transforming Lives, Everyday!”.	Footer, About, metadata
5	What is the official email address?	Info sheets show abworld80@gmail.com; old site shows info@abwaaworld.org. TDD confirms no email.	Contact, Footer, Legal
6	Which phone number is correct?	TDD confirms +254 720 021 001. Info sheets and old site show +254 733 595 906. Only the TDD number is used.	Contact, Footer, Home
7	May the P.O. Box 1204-00515 Buruburu be public?	TDD says publish only if ABWA confirms.	Contact, Footer
8	Are the old social media accounts the official ones?	Old site links Facebook (vdccskenya), X (abwaworld) and Instagram (abwaworld). Not verified.	Footer, Floating buttons
9	Is WhatsApp used, and on which number?	TDD says not to assume any number is WhatsApp-enabled.	Floating button
10	What are ABWA's registration and governance details?	Old site says registered NGO. Draft constitution is marked “proposed”. TDD: no legal-status claim without proof.	About, Footer, FAQ, Terms
11	Is there a vision statement and an approved set of values?	None supplied. A vision and four principles are suggested, labelled for approval.	About, Home
12	How can people donate?	Old site uses a PayPal donate button. TDD says payment methods are unconfirmed. Page is written in two versions.	Donate, FAQ, Privacy, Terms
13	Are there any verified figures (people reached, trees planted, children fed)?	Old site claims 430 children and “thousands of lives”. These are left out until a source and date are supplied.	Home, Impact, Programmes
14	Do we have real testimonials and stories with written consent?	None supplied. No testimonial or story has been invented.	Home, Stories, Impact
15	Are there approved photos, with permission?	Old site shows photos and videos, but permission, subjects and captions are unknown. Children need guardian consent.	All pages, Gallery
16	Who may be named: schools, partners, the Umisiiyu group?	Sources name a school (spelling varies), EKFA, and Amani Conference Centre. Spelling of Umisiiyu varies (Umiisyu, Umisyu). None named without permission.	Programmes, Blog

#	Question for ABWA	What I found	Affects
17	Does ABWA have a child safeguarding policy and photo policy?	Copy states safeguarding commitments (consent, no identifying details). ABWA must confirm they match its practice.	Programmes, Volunteer, FAQ, Gallery
18	Does ABWA also want the Jora Women Group and the Upendo Women Group included?	Both appear on the old Projects page but not in the TDD plan. Not written up.	Programmes
19	Who will review the three launch articles?	Farming advice should be checked by someone knowledgeable. Dates and byline need approval.	Blog
20	What are the email provider, analytics choice, retention period and hosting?	Needed to finish the Privacy Policy accurately.	Privacy

What changed from the old website

A short note so ABWA is not surprised

The new copy is deliberately more careful than the old site. Here are the main differences, and why.

Old site said	New copy does	Reason
“Registered Non-governmental organisation”	Leaves out any registration claim for now.	TDD: no legal-status claim without proof. The constitution supplied is a proposed draft.
“Over 430 children receive food”	Leaves it out.	Unsourced number with no date.
“Thousands of lives are impacted”	Says nothing numerical. Offers honest description.	No evidence supplied.
Population figures for Mathare, and descriptions of crime and prostitution	Describes Mathare as one of the oldest and largest informal settlements, and speaks of talent and energy as well as challenge.	Dignity-first language, and the TDD asks for no deficit-based language or unsupported statistics.
“Slum projects”	Uses “informal settlement” or the place name.	More respectful and more precise.
Claims that classes keep youth from crime and drugs	Leaves out.	Unsupported cause-and-effect claim.
Donate buttons on every programme	One Support page, with a version for each situation.	TDD: no payment flow without confirmed details and tested provider.
“Since 2014”	Uses 2015.	TDD lists 2015 as confirmed.
Different phone number and an email	Uses only the TDD phone number.	TDD lists no email as confirmed.
“Programs”	“Programmes” throughout.	British spelling, applied consistently.
